Quebec report makes sciences point of discussion at Loyola

Quebec's Ministry of Education released a report in July that is now the subject of wide discussion at Concordia, since its recommendations could significantly change the science programs offered on both campuses. The report is the work of a ministry committee,

Operation Sciences Fondamentales (OSF), and spells out these possible changes for Concordia:

All B.Sc. programs should be modified to better meet the needs of society by preparing students for immediate integration into the work force. Recommended are three new categories: normal specialized bachelor, bachelor with major, and bachelor with disciplinary concentration (with much narrower specialization than at present). OSF recommends that Concordia not carry the

Grads rout Concordia Varsity

The Loyola Grads hockey team caused a surprise of sorts last week by defeating the Concordia Varsity squad 6-2. The Alumni, boasting no less than five ex-pros in their lineup, were behind by two goals after one period but then came on for six straight goals in the last two periods to avenge their 3-2 loss of last year. Jim Webster and Steve Benoit each scored two for the Alumni, with singles going to Mike Lowe and Dave Brandt. Scoring for Concordia were Gaétan Potvin and John Harris.

Familiar faces dotted the Alumni aggregation, with the likes of John Hutton, Pat McCool, Danny McCann, Pete Morin Jr. and Danny O'Connor figuring prominently in the victory. The team was coached by Terry Pye, President of The Warriors' Club.

The Loyola Grads team is an all-star selection made from the four-team Sunday morning Alumni Hockey League, now into its third successful season. The Grads are also playing in a Thursday night league at Loyola against Concordia Junior Varsity, Distasio and University of Montreal Alumni. Additionally, the team will be sponsored by the Alumni Association in several intermediate tournaments in various cities of the province throughout the year.

Mike McNamara, who played at Loyola in the late '60's under Dick Rock and more recently two years of pro with Maine Nordiques, has been appointed captain of the team. This is his second year with the Grads.

Grad Allmand pronounced in top shape after Phys. Ed. test

Fending off the hangers and floggers in the capital punishment debate is an exhausting business. So when Bio Physical Education chief Ed Enos recently suggested fitness testing to Solicitor-General Warren Allmand (Loyola '53), what could he do but say yes? "My family has a history of heart disease," said Allmand, "but I play hockey with the alumni."

What the honourable gentleman from N.D.G. had agreed to was a complete check-up in Loyola's new Fitness Testing Research Lab, behind the Guadagni Lounge in the Central Building. Stripped to his shorts, Allmand looked nervous at first—not at all like the man who runs Canada's fearsome RCMP. But as tests progressed, confidence grew, if only because he did so well for a man of his 43 years.

"Not tired at all," he said as he pedalled the exercise cycle, his chest shaved to accommodate electrodes transmitting heart beats to an electrocardiograph, blipping out beats on the screen.

Lab chief Dr. William Sellers said Allmand's body fat was 17 percent of total weight—not bad for his vintage. "Look at those legs. The St. Louis Blues had legs like that when they were in for testing," said Enos, referring to Allmand's muscular carriage.

Allmand's no hockey pro, but his strength surprised testers. On a squeeze meter, Allmand's handgrip registered 58. (St. Louis Blues averaged 60.) To keep fit, Allmand skips rope. Sellers was pleased to hear this and encouraged him to keep it up.

The $40,000 facility, which opened this year, will test anyone from Concordia. Anyone, that is, who is willing to go on a waiting list and can provide clearance from a physician. "This medical clearance is most important for people over 35," Sellers said.

disciplinary concentration in Chemistry or Physics. It is recommended that Concordia give the program in Mathematics; but recommendations for Biology are not clear cut. Biochemistry would apparently fall by the wayside.

Additionally, the report recommends that the Loyola and Sir George departments of Chemistry, Physics and Mathematics should be fused into single departments to avoid duplication. Further, it suggests that Concordia's doctoral programs in Chemistry and Physics be abandoned. But OSF says Concordia should offer both B.Sc. and M.Sc. programs in the teaching of Mathematics, Biology, Chemistry and Physics.

Loyola's reaction to the report was aired at a meeting on October 15. The general feeling was that making undergraduate programs rigorously undisciplinary—as opposed to the current widely-based honours programs—would tend to cut off routes to graduate studies and serious research. Assistant Dean of Arts and Sciences Bill Akin pointed out, "It would mean that Concordia could not prepare students for graduate studies and would therefore be at a disadvantage in attracting students who plan to continue to graduate studies."

Both Loyola's Dean Breen and Sir George Science Dean Roger Verschlingel have since met with Rector John O'Brien to give him their recommendations on the university's response to the OSF report. O'Brien is scheduled to meet with OSF in early November.

Visiting Jesuit notes differences

Father Aloysius Murzello moved with easy grace, reflecting the effusiveness of his native Bombay. "It is my first time away from India," he said, having come to Loyola this year to study Communication Arts. "In India, there are so many people: people bumping, people touching, so many people so close to one another. Here people are polite, but distant and reserved."

The 33-year-old Jesuit finds the difference between people in the east and west a vital point in considering the future of Roman Catholicism on the sub-continent. "Young priests make changes in the mass, but the hierarchy resists change and looks to Rome."

Murzello's name derives from the 16th century Portuguese invaders who claimed Bombay for the Holy See. Despite his Christianity, he is resolutely an Indian. But if Christianity is to survive, the Indian church must undergo change. One solution, of which he speaks cautiously, is a possible schism such as those existing between Rome, Moscow and Constantinople.

But things needn't go that far, if Father Murzello and others like him continue to make the strides they're making. "We now use Indian music in some services," he said. "We include readings from the Upanishads and the Gita before the mass in some services. It is Hindu, but the readings speak of the glory and the love of God in a way which is compatible with Christianity. It is so poetic and beautiful that there should be no objection."
